The customers of the project have lived in this apartment for 15 years. During this time, their children have had time to grow up and move away, so it was necessary to adapt the interior to the changed lifestyle of the owners. The couple wanted to create a light, bright, clean and open space with a bay window in the living room and a utility room.

The original layout consisted of three bedrooms and a small kitchen-living room. The architects Irina and Ilya Sukovatov merged several rooms, which allowed to increase the common area, organize a guest bathroom and a utility room, and add storage space, which had previously been lacking. The master bedroom now has two windows and is adjoined by a walk-in closet and its own bathroom.

In the project, a complex supply and exhaust ventilation system with humidification was implemented and full automation of all systems and lighting was done. The interior itself is very laconic. Shades of gray and beige are combined with the warm color of the wooden wall panels, made to order. All the storage spaces are hidden behind the fronts, which eliminates visual noise. The bathroom uses only one type of porcelain stoneware to cover both the floor and the walls and countertops. All this creates a whole image, an airy and peaceful atmosphere.

The centerpiece of the apartment was the sofa from Poltrona Frau, which immediately won the hearts of the architects. Despite its impressive size, it doesn't look massive, thanks to the thin legs and the 45-degree rotation of the corner section. Due to such shape we were able to arrange a large sofa in the living room, providing wide aisles around it. In addition, this model successfully echoes the shape of the bay window.

The customers are very busy people, so they could not devote much time to the repair. With the architects we strictly agreed on deadlines and a budget to be met, agreed on visualizations and basic types of materials. “For everything else the choice was ours,” say Ilya and Irina. “For us it was the first experience when the customers did not participate in the implementation of the project at all. On the one hand - this is great and gives complete freedom and the opportunity to realize what you have planned, on the other hand - a huge responsibility, because all people are different and the perception of color, texture, texture can be different. Fortunately our tastes matched and the clients were very happy with the result.”
